MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

SUBJECT: "Some Likely Key Intelligence Questions for the 1980's"

The attached report, "Some Likely Key Intelligence Questions for the 1980's," is an example of a new product of the Office of Research and Development. It was generated by a small research group that is analyzing selected future intelligence problems. Their perspective is distinctly beyond those areas for which development projects are under way or are anticipated. Their work should help us to plan our R&D programs better and will be especially pertinent when we change to five-year budget submissions. An important side benefit of this activity is that generally the kind of problems examined are of wide interest. In this case, a continuing dialog was maintained with many analytical elements of the Agency, as well as with the IC Staff and other non-CIA organizations, during the formative stages of the report. I think the result reflects that broad interaction and wide dissemination of the report within the building will, I hope, keep the discussion going strong.
